Dear Mr. Albano,

I read with much interest the "Meeting Superman" article written by John Merrow in February's issue of Phi Delta Kappan. I don't often read all the articles in the magazine but this one caught my attention and I thoroughly enjoyed reading a success story despite all the odds you face! It seems you definitely have earned the title as "Superman!" I commend you, your faculty, and your students for your hard work and efforts. It is always rewarding to see the school and community working closely for success as well.

I especially appreciate your attention to teaching and practicing values in school. I personally believe as you build values and character you enlighten the very environment for success. Your school is truly a model for all schools.

I teach horticulture at Brookville High School in Lynchburg, Virginia. I have taught for 26 years and I have loved every minute of it. Teaching is my calling. My daughter is a freshman in college studying elementary education. I can only hope that she will find her place in a school that breeds success like Lincoln. Again, thanks for inspiring this veteran teacher!

With a smile,

Carole P. Stone
